■ CHARITY: Sawhorse race to raise money for Big Brothers Big Sisters

Saddle up, Port Colborne!

FRANKI IKEMAN
Postmedia Network

Horse racing will hit Main St. in Port Colborne for Canal Days on Saturday.

Sawhorses, made of wood and other materials, ridden by a "jockey" and powered by a human "engine" will be competing in a fundraiser for Big Brothers Big Sisters of South Niagara.

"We've decided that this is the first Canadian sawhorse race as far as we know, and that it's the single-largest in the country as far as we know," said insurance agent Mark Guilbeault, one of the community members and business owners along Main St. W. Involved in organizing the event.

Guilbeault said he got together with fellow business owner Frank Danch, from Frank's Home Building Centre, to come up with the idea, which they say they got from the horse replicas businesses hitched to the then-new bike racks a few summers ago. The horses were created and decorated to reflect the businesses.

The event is being hosted by the Main Street BIA.

"We're trying to get something up on our end of the street," said Danch.

Proceeds from the event are going to Big Brothers Big Sisters of South Niagara, and the money raised throughout the day will be specifically designated to the organization's programming in Port Colborne, said executive director Barb Van Der Heyden.

Van Der Heyden said Big Brothers, Big Sisters relies heavily on fundraising and donors within the community to run its programs.

"For us, it's really important that you get to the help within the communities," she said. "Funds are decreasing." Proceeds from sawhorse racing will go to help with the organization's one-on-one mentoring programs, after-school programs, Go Girls! group mentoring and Game On! group mentoring programs within Port Colborne.

"The best way that programming works is that you're in a community working within a community," Van Der Heyden said. "When you're doing that, you get the feel, you get your fingers on the pulse of what's going on and what's different and unique about that specific community."

"We are so very appreciative of these community people stepping forward and helping us to be able to provide service to the children

SIU investigating injury in Port Colborne arrest

Postmedia Network

The province's police watchdog is investigating an early Saturday arrest in Port Colborne that resulted in a 37-year-old man being taken to hospital.

Ontario's Special Investigations Unit said its investigation centres on that man and officers with both the Ontario Provincial Police and Niagara Regional Police.

About 2:25 a.m. Saturday, officers from both services were dispatched to the area of Moe's Tap & Wings at 190 Main St. E., Hwy. 140 regarding a disturbance.

On a news release, the SIU said there was an "interaction" between the man and police officers. The man sustained a facial injury and was taken to St. Catharines hospital for treatment.

The SIU has assigned three investigators and one forensic investigator to probe the circumstances of this incident.

One subject officer from the NRP, five witness officers from the NRP and two witness officers from the OPP have been designated.

The SIU is urging anyone who may have witnessed the arrest to contact the unit at 1-800-787-8229, ext. 1965.

Niagara Regional Police have released no details of the incident, nor is it likely to now that the matter is being investigated by the SIU.

The SIU is an arm's-length agency that investigates reports involving police where there has been death, serious injury or allegations of sexual assault. Under the Police Services Act, the director of the SIU must consider whether an officer has committed a criminal offence in connection with the incident under investigation depending on the evidence, lay a criminal charge against an officer if appropriate or close the file without any charges being laid, and report the results of any investigations to the attorney general.

■ POLICE: Caledon man was not wearing life-jacket on choppy Erie water, police say

Young man's body recovered from lake Erie

SARAH FERROUSON
Postmedia Network

Police recovered the body of a 21-year-old Caledon man who fell into Lake Erie last Thursday.

"The family is devastated and they don't want to speak with media. The name of the man will not be released," Niagara Regional Police Const. Phil Gavin said.

Gavin said the man's body was found in the water about 50 metres from the south end of the jetty at Crystal Beach. He was in about 2.5 metres of water. A diver from the NRP underwater search and recovery unit found the man and brought him to shore Friday morning.

Police, Niagara Emergency Medical Services and Fort Erie Fire Department were called to the Crystal Beach area Thursday at 5 p.m., after the man was reported missing.

Gavin said four people had gone out on the lake in an inflatable raft. The man—who was not wearing a life-jacket—fell into the water near the Crystal Beach boat launch.

The NRP marine unit searched for the missing man last Thursday night with the assistance of the Canadian Coast Guard, the fire department, a Royal Canadian Mounted Police vessel and a helicopter from the Trenton Air Force base.

"At the time of the search, the wave conditions were two to four feet high and conditions continued to worsen as the search continued," Gavin said. "The visibility wasn't the best, but we continued the search until the light conditions faded."

The search continued into Friday morning. The man was found at about 11:10 a.m.

Circumstances surrounding the cause of the death remain under investigation by the NRP Fort Erie criminal investigation branch and the forensic services unit. Police say foul play is not suspected.

The three other individuals involved in the incident were not harmed.

Crystal Beach resident Wendy Fletcher said she knew something was wrong when she heard sirens.

"I could see it (the search) sitting on my deck. I counted four and then seven boats in the water," Fletcher said.

"It always makes me sick when something like this happens. I've lived here for 37 years and it's awful when something like this happens."

Ridgeway resident Anthony Ibbas was getting takeout from a local restaurant at 8:20 p.m. when he saw flashing lights and heard the loud hum of a helicopter.

"It was so crowded. There were people everywhere, there were cars everywhere and there was police everywhere with signals flashing."

Ibbas said the water "was very choppy" Thursday night.

"When I saw what was going on and I saw the police lights, I knew something had happened to someone. The water was very rough (Thursday) night."

Wainfleet business confesses to success

MARYANNE FIRTH
Postmedia Network

It's a smalltown shop doing big city business.

Driving by, one would never guess Kingswood Millwork & Design — tucked away on a rural road in Wainfleet — has had a hand in preserving one of New York City's most prominent landmarks.

The company, which specializes in historic replication, has been given the monumental task of restoring four confessionals from the famous St. Patrick's Cathedral in Manhattan.

The job is only a small part of the massive $175-million, three-year restoration project at the church, which is expected to be completed in the next few months.

"It's exciting for all of us to work on these high-profile projects," Kingswood president Al Cheynowski, who co-owns the business alongside brother Randy, said on behalf of his staff of 10.

"We're very proud of what we do here. Proud of what we make."

While based in Wainfleet, the company also has a small shop in Buffalo and generates much of its work from New York City.

It was a referral from a past job that initially got the company's foot in the door for the cathedral project.

"We did some carving for St. Pat's, restored the transept doors and then the confessional project came up," Cheynowski said.

The solid wood confessionals were disassembled and brought to the Wainfleet shop, where staff have spent the past eight months working to restore them to their original glory, including decorative wooden tracery that adorns much of the structures.

About 10% of the project has involved repair or replication work, with the rest solely restoration.

The fourth confessional, the most intricate in the set, had to have two double-doors created and special hardware designed to go unnoticed among the carving work.

All new pieces need to blend in with the existing tracery, Cheynowski said, and must be precise in detail to look as authentic as possible within the neo-Gothic style Roman Catholic church.

Each decorative piece is hand-carved by Kingswood master woodworker Barrie Cament.

Each confessional has to be fully assembled in the Burnaby Rd. shop to ensure it fits together perfectly before being disassembled and shipped back to the church for installation.

"It's very much a niche market," Cheynowski said.

"We're always bidding

Wainfleet company Kingswood Millwork & Design has been tasked with restoring four confessionals from St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York City.

against other companies, but we have a bit of an advantage because we do both new manufacturing and restoration.

"Few want to take that combined business on because it's such a small market."

While experience is first and foremost, the Wellandport native believes Kingswood's small size is a close runner-up among selling points.

"It means we can be more flexible on jobs," he said, adding it's a quality that came in handy on the St. Patrick's project in particular.

The business recently learned the competition deadline was moved up about six weeks to accommodate the just-announced visit of Pope Francis to the cathedral Sept. 24.

Staff have since been working feverishly to meet the new deadline, Cheynowski said, adding pieces of the last con-fessional were expected to be shipped out by the end of the month. Some were due to arrive in New York as soon as Thursday.

"We take servicing them pretty very seriously. That's so important," he said of the company's clientele.

"Because we're so small, we don't have branding. We don't have marketing. We rely a lot on referrals and repeat business."

It seems the company's efforts don't go unnoticed.

"St. Patrick's Cathedral is happy with Kingswood Millwork's hard work and is grateful for their help in preparing the cathedral for Pope Francis's September visit, (as well as) for the many generations to come," spokeswoman Kate Monaghan said.

In the 10 years since its inception, Kingswood Millwork has built an impressive list of clients.

The company has done work at New York's Columbia University, the Corbin Building, the New York home of the Swedish ambassador to the United Nations, as well as the Brooklyn home of acclaimed singer-songwriter Norah Jones.

While Cheynowski admitted some places were "very intimidating" at times, he considers himself "very fortunate to have that kind of access."

"We all love architecture here. It's amazing some of the places you get to see that other people don't."

Once the St. Patrick's project is complete, Kingswood will begin work at Woodrow Wilson Hall, part of Monmouth University in New Jersey. The 130-room building, used as the mansion of Oliver Warburton in the 1982 film Annie, is in need of door replications and stairwell upgrades.

■ CONVENTION: Fire Fighters Association of Ontario annual convention hosted in Wainfleet

Firefighters from across the province coming to Wainfleet

FRANKI IKEMAN
Postmedia Network

More than a hundred firefighters will be arriving in Wainfleet this week as they gear up for the annual Fire Fighters' Association of Ontario conference, hosted by Wainfleet Fire Department.

The annual general convention will be jam-packed with educational courses, competitions, games and parades, and an estimated 150 to 300 volunteer firefighters will be camping out in the village to participate.

Firefighter Tim Bunz, who is co-chair for this year's convention, said that hosting the FFAO is Wainfleet's way of doing its part for the association. It's also the first time the convention has been held south of Hwy. 401 in 20 years, said Matt DeVries, fellow firefighter and chair of this year's convention.

The weekend will be busy, with many events open to the public to watch, starting off with a firefighter competition Saturday at 1 p.m. which will include rescue and hose races. On Sunday at 9 a.m. there will be a memorial parade for fallen firefighters held at the cenotaph, followed by a breakfast by Wainfleet/Port Colborne cadets from 10:30 a.m. until noon, and more firefighter competitions and games starting at 1 p.m. The weekend will wrap up on the holiday Monday with an apparatus parade at 10 a.m. and an awards presentation at 11:30 a.m.

"We'd like to see the people in the community come out and support the parades that are here, support some of the games out here, come out and see what we do," said Bunz. "This convention coming here, it's good for the community. I mean we don't have a lot of retail businesses but the ones in the area in Wainfleet here obviously will be supported here and do well from it."

Wainfleet Fire Department is hosting the FFAO for two years, and while it had to spend some money to get the area ready to play host for this year, FFAO president Chris Karpinchick of Port Colborne said the hope is that by the end of the second year Wainfleet Fire Department will have been able to raise some money for its association to put towards equipment, gear or to donate to local charities.

The convention is being held in the village at Wainfleet Fire Station 2 on Park St.

■ I'VE BEEN THINKING

The church continues its evolution

REV. THOMAS P. ARTH

First Evangelical Lutheran Church

Where is the church headed? By that I mean, what will the church be like in the future?

The church today is not like the church of my childhood back in the 1970s. That was the tail end of what was pretty much an anomaly that started with the baby boom in the 1950s. Churches were filled, new churches were being built, old churches were being expanded with education wings being attached, the money from offerings was just flowing in to pay for it all.

But probably since my teenage years in the 1980s the church has been seeing a decline, at least here in North America and maybe even longer than that in Europe. That's not the case everywhere. In the global south, in Africa, Asia and South America, the church is seeing incredible life and growth. But not here.

Now, that's not the case for every congregation. There are examples of growing churches whose members continue to worship and be involved in the life of the church and who are reaching people who have never heard the message about Jesus Christ or who had been away from any kind of church for a long time. I give kudos to those churches and pray for the continued faithfulness and effectiveness that they see in proclaiming the Gospel of Jesus Christ and sharing the love of God with a hurting world.

While some churches are seeing growth the reality and the overall trend does seem to be decline. So what does the future of the church look like? Well, nobody has a crystal ball that will tell us definitively. But the church is undergoing change. The church is not going to return to what it was in the middle of the past century. Society has moved and is continuing to move away from giving the church the place of influence and importance that it once had in the community. And not just the Christian church but religion in general has lost the place in people's lives that it once occupied.

I believe the church will endure. There's a story in the scriptures where Jesus asks his closest followers, "who do you say that I am?" One of them, Simon Peter, answered, "You are the Messiah, the Son of the living God." This was a statement of faith that he didn't come up with on his own, but was inspired by the Spirit of God. And Jesus said, "on this rock I will build my church, and the gates of Hades will not prevail against it" (Matthew 16:18).

Earlier this summer a colleague and I were discussing the present and the future of the church and he reminded me of that story and those words of Jesus. It's not up to us to build the church. Jesus said that's what he will do. He also reminded me of words of Jesus later in Matthew's gospel where he tells us what the task of his followers actually is. "Go therefore and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them ... and teaching them ..." (Matthew 28:19-20).

That is the task of all of Jesus's followers (not just the pastors, priests, and preachers). We who are part of the church have heard a message of grace, that God loves us and forgives us and wants to be in relationship with us. And it's not because we're so good or become so good. It's because God's love is so abundant and extravagant that he showers us with that love precisely when we're not all that deserving.

As people who know that grace, who know that love, who live in a relationship with that God, we ought to be compelled to share that Good News with others who haven't discovered that yet. That's our job as followers of Jesus, to make disciples, to tell the Good News about Jesus to others that they might also become followers. And what the church will look like in the future, who knows? But at the end of Matthew's gospel Jesus concludes with these words, "And remember, I am with you always, to the end of the age" (Matthew 28:20). Whatever the church will be like, Jesus is with us.

Shipwrecks – Canadian Miner

SKIP GILLHAM
For Postmedia Network

There was much celebration around Scaterie Island, N.S., on June 22, as the last piece of the stranded Canadian freighter Miner was removed from the water.

The 222.5-metre-long retired bulk carrier was on its way to Aliaga, Turkey, for scrapping when it broke loose and came ashore on Sept. 20, 2011. The hull was well up on the beach and soon the elements pounded huge holes in the vessel making salvage impossible in the sensitive lobster fishing area.

The only alternative was to dismantle the huge vessel on site but the cost and responsibility for the work was an issue of hot debate. Equipment had to be brought in, roads built and temporary housing set up to accommodate the workers. It took longer than expected but the hattered vessel has finally been removed.

This ship had sailed the Great Lakes from 1966 through 2008 under the names of Mapleleaf Hall, the second Lemoyne and Canadian Miner before it became Miner for the long overseas tow that was never completed.

■ DEVELOPMENT: Five communities now appealing school board's plan to tax new home construction

Fee fighters list grows

MARYANNE FIRTH
Postmedia Network

Several municipalities are joining Fort Erie's fight against education development charges recently imposed by Niagara's Catholic school board.

The town has filed an appeal to the Ontario Municipal Board opposing the new fee Niagara Catholic District School Board has chosen to attach to every new residential housing unit built in Niagara over the next five years.

Set at $172 for homes within the former Welland County boundaries and $186 for those in the old Lincoln County area, the charges will be used by the board to fund land purchases to build new schools in areas experiencing growth.

Fort Erie took issue with the fact developers in all Niagara municipalities will be charged even though schools are only projected to be built in the Niagara Falls, Lincoln and Grimsby areas.

Pelham, Port Colborne and Thorold, all considered by the board as within the former Welland County, have since opted to follow Fort Erie's lead.

Niagara-on-the-Lake, which falls under the former Lincoln County and as a result a different bylaw, also decided to appeal.

"We're happy to see other municipalities are sharing Fort Erie's concerns," said Rick Brady, the town's director of community and development services.

"This allows us to work together as a team. I'm sure we'll be meeting in the not-so-distant future to discuss how we can co-operate in terms of managing the appeal."

Brady said he would like to see both appeals, from Welland and Lincoln County municipalities, heard at a single hearing to reduce costs and address both bylaws at once.

"I'm hopeful the board can see we should all work together and come up with a solution that can work for all of us."

Pelham council approved a staff recommendation to move forward with the appeal process.

Like other communities, Pelham is appealing because the board has opted not to charge the fees on an area-specific basis, instead implementing the charges in all Niagara municipalities.

"Councilors were all on board with it," town treasurer Carl Pupo said, adding the consensus was that Pelham developers should not be paying fees that will be used to purchase land for schools in other communities.

While she could not pinpoint how many homes are set to be built in the next five years, Pupo said the town is projected to see 2,950 residential units constructed between 2015 and 2033. That would result in more than $500,000 in education development charges.

While there may be a cost associated with the appeal, an amount still unknown at this time, Pupo believes it will be "well worth it to show we're fighting for the development community."

Thorold finance director Maria Mauro said the city also believes the charges should be applied on an area-specific basis.

"It's a bit different for us, because the school board already owns a vacant school site property in Thorold," Mauro said, referring to land on Richmond St. that has gone unused for some time.

"For us a property already exists, but developers will be forced to pay into potential school sites in other municipalities."

To meet the July 27 appeal deadline, Port Colborne was to address the issue Monday.

Wainfleet treasurer Robyn Madere said the township intended to also appeal.

Niagara Catholic was granted approval to apply the education development charges by the Ministry of Education after submitting a report outlining the board's past and projected growth. The charges came into effect June 22.

■ INFRASTRUCTURE: Southern tier councils echo similar request made regarding Niagara-on-the-Lake airport

Welland joins call for Region to run Pelham airport

GREG FURMINGER
Postmedia Network

Niagara Region will be requested to take two airports under its wings.

Welland city council has given its unanimous support behind the upper-tier municipality assuming control of Pelham-based Niagara Central Dorothy Rungeling Airport.

Rose City politicians joined those of Pelham and Port Colborne in endorsing a Niagara Central Airport commission motion — Wainfleet, the other controlling partner municipality, is expected to follow suit — that calls for a regional rescue.

"It's come to a point where we're challenged with our funding," said Ward 6 Coun. Jim Larocque prior to the local airport commission motion being passed by Welland council with virtually no debate.

Niagara Central Airport commission's request follows that of Niagara District Airport commission's desire to have Niagara Region control the Niagara-on-the-Lake airport, since endorsed by its municipal partners of St. Catharines, Niagara Falls and Niagara-on-the-Lake.

The south wants the same consideration.

"The commission feels that it would be appropriate that the region, in considering any decision to take over the Niagara District Airport, should also consider assuming the operation and control of the Niagara Central Dorothy Rungeling Airport," commission secretary-treasurer Bruce Smith wrote in correspondence faxed to the City of Welland on July 3.

The motion put forth by the southern airport commission said the Pelham airport will generate an economic impact for all of Niagara of $40 million between 2004 and 2018, based on a November 2014 report by David Archibold.

GREG FURMINGER/POSTMEDIA NETWORK

Planes are parked at Niagara Central Dorothy Rungeling Airport in Pelham, which its commission wants Niagara Region to consider assuming control of with Niagara District Airport in Niagara-on-the-Lake.

Both airports complement and support each other to provide "a full airport system" for Niagara, the motion stated, while also noting its importance to the Niagara South Economic Development Plan.

Niagara Central Dorothy Rungeling Airport — recently renamed for the 103-year-old pioneering aviator of Pelham — is home to 50 aircraft and five businesses including St. Catharines Flying Club, Niagara Skydive Centre and Tarczy Aircraft mechanic services and Accipiter Radar Technologies is building a demonstration hangar.

It is also home to 87 Eagle Squadron Air Cadets.

It has room for expansion for commercial and private hangars.

The 416-acre airport has two paved runways (lengths of 3,500 and 2,670 metres), has water landing access on the Welland River and accommodates glider training and parachuting.

Including revenues, the south airport has an annual operating budget of less than $200,000. Its four partnered municipalities contribute about 51 per cent to its operation.

According to the local commission, the Pelham airport attracts 10,000 tourists to Niagara annually as a result of flying, parachuting, flight training and other operations.

Niagara District Airport commission wants to move its facility from one for general aviation to one that supports international flights, a change that would require an estimated $8 million in upgrades. Its current annual operating budget is $300,000.

Pelham Mayor Augustyn has said he's not supportive of Niagara Region control of the NOTL airport unless both airports are considered in tandem.

Region Chair Alan Casslin has said the upper-tier municipality will examine all proposals for regional airports that are received by regional council.

A Jacobs Consultancy report released in August 2009 recommended Niagara Region take the reins of Niagara District Airport — but said that if not control or regularly fund Niagara Central Airport.

■ HEALTH CARE: Confirming services that will be offered says NHS official

New hospital 'on target'

ALISON LANGLEY
Postmedia Network

There is a lot of "heavy lifting" going on behind the scenes of the $26.2-million planning grant process for a south Niagara hospital on the outskirts of Niagara Falls, says Jim Diodati.

Everything is moving forward as planned, the Niagara Falls mayor said Monday.

"We're going through the planning grant process and at some point after that's done the provincial government would have to make a further announcement of funding and then groundbreaking. That's the next big step we're looking forward to."

Niagara Health System formed a planning committee in 2014 to steer the organization through the planning grant process to look at a new hospital at Montrose and Lyons Creek Rds. and two urgent care centres.

"We are on target and on plan," said Angela Zangari, NHS executive vice-president of finance and operations.

A clinical services plan has been completed and the report is available to the public on the NHS website.

The NHS is now working on the next stage of the process called master programming, master planning.

"We're looking at confirming what services will be on site," Zangari added.

"After that, we will get a sense of what the footprint of the hospital will look like."

Diodati met recently with officials at the premier's office as well as the Ministry of Finance and plans to meet with the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care at the upcoming conference of the Association of Municipalities Ontario which will be held in Niagara Falls Aug. 16 to 19.

"I don't like to wait until there's an issue — I like to be pro-active — so we've been having ongoing discussions," the mayor added. "We are continually confirming the path that we're on."

The NHS is the lead on the planning work for the new hospital.

"Planning for Stage 1 pro-positional submission is currently underway. To date, the ministry has not received any capital planning submissions," said Joanne Woodward Fraser, senior communications advisor, media communications and marketing division of the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care.

NHS chief executive officer Kevin Smith in 2012 recommended closing existing south Niagara hospitals and replacing them with a single new hospital to be built in Niagara Falls.

The province in 2014 committed $26.2 million towards the planning of a new hospital. At that time, officials said the planning process could take up to 24 months.

Niagara Falls city council committed $22 million towards the project Fort Erie town council pledged $3 million.

Business plan paying off: Caslin

GRANT LAFLECHE
Postmedia Network

Niagara's role as a Pan Am Games host has come to an end, but Niagara's regional chair is trying to keep the eyes of the world here.

Alan Caslin and other Niagara leaders joined their Hamilton counterparts in that city last Wednesday to talk about business opportunities the games may have brought to Ontario.

"It was an excellent meeting," Caslin said of the trade forum, which also included Hamilton Mayor Fred Eisenberger.

The meeting was part of a joint Niagara-Hamilton strategy dubbed "playbook." Niagara and Hamilton would use the international attention Pan Am Games brought to highlight business opportunities for international investors.

Caslin said there were workshops for international visitors held in Niagara during the Pan Am Games.

"We are saying to them, 'How can we help you do business in Niagara?"

Caslin said initial response from the international business people was one of surprise.

"I think they were a little bit surprised that we were willing to be so helpful. We are asking, what do they need? If they are talking about building here, we are talking about reducing or waiving development fees if possible," Caslin said.

"They were not expecting us to be as helpful I think."

The strategy is showing some signs of paying off.

During the Wednesday meeting, a sports analytics company out of Peru announced it is setting up shop in Hamilton and Niagara.

And, Caslin said, in October there will be meetings with a Colombian trade mission where he will again pitch the idea of Niagara as a place to do business.

CHARITY

Wells of Hope passionate for about water

GRANT LAFLECHE
Postmedia Network

The reality is that charity doesn't come easy and it often doesn't come cheap. Beyond the warm feelings of helping others in need, a charity often needs focused organization and money.

Scott Maxwell from Wells of Hope — a Niagara-based charity that provides clean water and other supports for the poor living in the mountains of Jalapa, Guatemala — knows this more than most.

While Wells of Hope founder Ted van der Valm digs wells and leads teams of volunteers in Guatemala, Maxwell finds the financial support at home to keep the work going.

That explains his enthusiasm for a customized work van, donated by Ed Patton of Graffiti Busters and U-Cart Concrete, draped in a Wells of Hope banner and parked outside Mori Gardens in Niagara-on-the-Lake.

"Isn't this something?" he asked during an interview about Wells of Hope's upcoming fundraising at the garden centre. "It's part of our silent auction."

The van, along with other items, will be up for grabs at the annual Passion event being held at Mori Gardens on July 31.

It's the fifth year for the event, and a critical fundraiser for Wells of Hope, Maxwell said.

The event brings 15 local restaurants, 15 winners and two Niagara breweries together for the evening, along with entertainment.

Maxwell said he hopes to raise about $20,000 to fund Wells of Hope's programming in Jalapa, which includes education and women's programs along with prospecting and digging for clean water sources. Many people in the mountains of Jalapa have no access to clean water.

■ UNIVERSITY PREP PROGRAM

Busting barriers to post-secondary education

DON FRASER

Postmedia Network

Jahnyah Learmond has her heart set on physiotherapy studies in university.

But she has also worried that post-secondary funding and family time management could make it a stretch.

A recent exposure to a new Brock University program is changing her views.

She's realizing scholarships alternatives and organizational skills will help her dream happen.

"If I could go to university it next year, I would do it," said Learmond, who splits her time between St. Catharines and Whitchurch and has completed Grade 10 at Denis Morris High School.

"Now I know what I need to take for Grade 11 and 12," said the 16-year-old. "And at university there is help if you have problems in classes, and I'm also learning how to prioritize and organize with time."

Learmond — who is thinking about going to Queen's University — is part of a just-launched university preparation program for Niagara high schools.

The pilot program is a two-week, tuition-free experience for students who might not otherwise pursue a post-secondary education.

Young people who are entering grades 10 to 12 are identified by schools or social-service agencies as ideal candidates.

They may have parents with no postsecondary education, come from a lower income family, live in a rural area identify as aboriginal or have a disability or have other issues that could serve as barriers.

Programs include workshops to prepare for careers and post-secondary preparation, communication skills, leadership training and community service.

Afterwards, participants get support and access to services from Brock through the rest of their time in high school.

Youth University director Kate Cassidy said about 40 people are taking part in the program over four sessions this summer.

"Research shows there are certain populations that are less likely to even consider university," Cassidy said.

"And it can be a very daunting and difficult thing to understand the cultures and way of university."

"We've designed the program based on what we know are some of the reasons people wouldn't consider university, such as not understanding financial support, or misperceptions of how much it costs ... understanding what careers they might want," Cassidy said.

Preparation program coordinator Susan McGlynn said a key part of the program is to motivate.

"We're trying to show them if you want post-secondary education, it can happen," she said.

"We're trying to help them consider the obstacles in their way and then how to overcome them, and that there are resources available to support them."

Some Niagara College foreign grads denied work permits

DON FRASER
Postmedia Network

Some foreign student graduates from Niagara College who have done online learning in a popular program are being denied post-graduate work permits.

This, because Citizenship and Immigration Canada says "distance learning" makes them ineligible after their student permits expire.

Those affected might even be forced to leave the country as a result.

A college representative says he shares the grads' concern "regarding the inconsistency" in how the federal government applies its requirements for post-graduate work permits.

"Upon hearing of this issue, the college took steps to support our graduates and we continue to do so," said Mike Wales, from the college.

The students affected are in the school's general arts and sciences program, normally a two-year study.

Lawyer Ravi Jain representing the students said one course had to be in class, and the other three could be online.

Meanwhile, international students who already have a foreign bachelor's degree and who also have a year of post-secondary studies in Canada need only one semester at Niagara College to gain a diploma.

Anish Goyal, 27, is a Niagara College grad from the program and a student from India. Goyal, who has paid about $7,700 in tuition to the college, also runs a Facebook group of affected students.

He came to Canada in 2013 to Centennial College to study project management and then took the Niagara College course. His student permit ended in March. He has not yet been issued a work permit he has applied for.

"We did our due diligence," Goyal said.

"The college gave us in writing that their program has been provincially and federally recognized. And processes have been ministerially followed without cutting any corners."

Goyal said it has also been "clearly mentioned" this program makes us eligible to apply for a three-year post-graduate work permit.

"I don't know why there is a difference of opinion from the immigration department ... who believes this program is distance learning whereas the college says this program is not distance learning."

Goyal himself did some online work as part of the arts and sciences program. "As far as I know every program offered in Canada by a college or university has an online component," he said in a follow-up e-mail.

Jain represents more than 50 of the students, two are Chinese and the rest from India. He said about 30 have had their work permits denied, with another 20 who are on hold pending an investigation and Jain expects them to be refused. Normally, those who are refused will be forced to leave the country.

"These students took a course that had a mix of online and class," Jain said.

He figures some students were attracted to the program because it was going to issue a two-year diploma in potentially four months.

He said the concern is that when colleges design these programs, "they have to excise extraordinary due diligence."

"They have to ensure their programs are compliant" with subsequent work permit eligibility, Jain said.

In determining that, they should take a "very conservative approach" in determining federal immigration law.

Jain adds it seems "clearly stated" there is there to be no distance learning.

As the rule is no definition of distance learning provided, "as lawyers ... we say 'what's the plain meaning?' at a distance."

"So a conservative interpretation if the law is 'don't do it'."

Wales said the general arts and science diploma program is widely offered at colleges in Ontario, with typically 600 students enrolled in the program at Niagara College each year.

"While international applicants to this program are made aware of the opportunity to apply for a post-graduate work permit, they're also advised of the application process involved," he said.

Wales said the college has sought clarification on this issue from the immigration department on how it defines "distance learning."

Niagara College doesn't offer distance learning, he said in an e-mailed statement from the college.

"Students have several accessibility options for individual courses - including online options - but all full-time students must take in-class, on-campus courses to graduate," Wales said.

Wales said hundreds of international graduates of the general arts and science "exploration" program have successfully applied for a post-graduate work permit, including many among the same group as those denied.

"There has been no change to the delivery or curriculum of the program, which is approved by the ministry of training, colleges and universities, and meets the same standards as all of our diploma programs," he said.

"While we haven't made changes to the program itself, in light of the recent changes in how (the federal department) applies its application requirements, we have advised students taking this program that taking online courses is not recommended."

Jain also adds the federal government is "having a problem with consistency" as some grads are getting their work permits and others are not.

"It's totally confusing to everyone," he said. "And they need to modernize and keep up with the pace of education and they're not."

"I don't entirely fault them on being a little slow here," he said, adding, "In my mind, the problem is with any college that takes an aggressive approach in designing programs with online courses."

In the meantime, he's trying to get some response from the federal government about a clearer definition of distance learning as it pertains to the students.

"You'd think they'd be receptive," he said. "After all, it was a community college that told them they'd be OK."

Jain said some public sentiment might be that the program is "too good to be true, you do a four-month (semester) and you're supposed to do two years."

"But colleges have the right to recognize transfer credits ... so it was legitimate to recognize a significant number of them and given them that extra credit."

Jain said he's also looking at trying to get some of the affected students temporary resident permits on a humanitarian basis.

Nancy Canon with Citizenship and Immigration Canada said "as stated on CIC's website, students who complete a program of study with distance learning, from outside or inside Canada, are not eligible for post-graduate work permits."

"Post-graduate work permits may be issued for the length of the study program, up to a maximum of three years," Canon said.

She adds work permit applications, including post-graduate work permits, are assessed "on a case-by-case basis by professional, highly-trained officers based on the specific facts presented by the applicant."

"We continuously review our regulations and guidelines for officers to ensure they serve Canada's best interests."

Interview skills, effective job searching and focusing on employability — all are key to helping people with disabilities cross the threshold to good employment.

With that in mind, the federal government is providing $406,000 for a work readiness program pilot project to help 32 Niagarans with disabilities overcome barriers to jobs.

A new office on Church St. in St. Catharines is being run by the Coalition for Persons with Disabilities, which already has offices in Mississauga, Brampton and Orangeville. An office is also to open this fall in Guelph.

Funding was announced Wednesday by St. Catharines MP Rick Dykstra.

"People with disabilities deserve every opportunity to participate in the job market," said Dykstra at the ribbon-cutting inside the sixth-floor office. "That's what partnership with organizations like the coalition is absolutely critical.

The project announced today focuses on helping people realize their potential in the job market."

The 24-week program aims to boost skills in areas like time management and effective communication through group workshops and one-on-one training. Some may receive additional training related to their career goals.

Participants will get work experience with local employers in areas such as construction, health care and information technology.

"We know this program will be really successful in Niagara," said Linda Souliere, executive director of Coalition for Persons with Disabilities. "We're going to fill a gap that you have."

"Now we just need our community partners to make referrals to this program. This project with Service Canada will certainly make a difference in the lives of these 32 people."

CLIMB ABOARD

SAFETY VESSELS
ALONG WEST STREET

FIREBOAT EDWARD M. COTTER

Built and commissioned during an era where Buffalo's waterfront and port were booming, the Cotter has been an invaluable asset of fire protection for the numerous warehouses, grain elevators and other facilities that line Buffalo's shores.

On October 7, 1960, an unprecedented event occurred in American history. On that night, at the age of 60, Edward M. Cotter's extraordinary firefighting abilities were called upon to help Buffalo's fellow firefighters in another country.

A blaze had erupted in the eight-story Maple Leaf Milling Company, a grain and milling complex in Port Colborne. With no fireboat protection of their own, Port Colborne Fire Dept. sent the call out requesting the Cotter.

At approximately 8:30pm, with no radar of her own to help her navigate, the Cotter began her trip across the waters of Lake Erie. Two hours after receiving the call, the Cotter arrived. With all her guns brought to bear, she fought for more than four hours until the blaze was finally extinguished. On that day, the Edward M. Cotter became the first fireboat in the United States to cross the international line to fight a fire.

New jobs to follow Hydac expansion

OREG FORUMER
Postmedia Network

A hydraulic equipment manufacturer and supplier is embarking on a nearly $2-million expansion that will create a handful of new jobs in Welland.

Hydac Canada, at 14 Federal Rd. facing Prince Charles Dr., has been awarded a Welland Niagara Gateway Economic Zone and Centre community improvement plan grant toward construction of its $1.825-million project.

The company plans to build a 1,214-square-metre shop addition to its existing 3,088-square-metre manufacturing facility.

According to a city report, the new facility will create the equivalent of five or six full-time jobs while retaining 43 full-time jobs.

The development will include nine sheltered bicycle parking spots.

The company has qualified for $194,400 through the city's Tax Increment Based Grant Program, for which costs are shared by Niagara Region. The annual grant payment will be about $38,867 over each of the coming five years, the report showed.

When the project is completed, it will represent an additional $28,608 in tax revenues to the city and $26,900 to the Region.

Hydac was founded in 1995 as a division of Hydac International based out of Germany. Its products can be found in numerous applications, including for wind turbines, roller-coasters and airplanes. It was established as the sole distribution centre for Hydac International in Canada, but in Welland is now progressing more heavily toward manufacturing.

■ WRESTLING: 'We try to put on a show for the whole family' says Crossfire chief LaPlante

GRANT LAPLETTE / POST MEDIA NETWORK

Heroes, villains and figure-four leg locks

GRANT LAPLETTE
Postmedia Network

Things were not going well in the ring for Chris LaPlante.

He was getting tossed from one ring post to the other, and no matter how many times those at ringside shouted encouragement, he could not turn the tide of the battle.

LaPlante looked finished.

Trapped in that most iconic of professional wrestling holds, the dreaded figure-four leg lock, his face was a mask of pain. But just as all looked lost, he reversed the hold and his villainous foe, Turner "The Nice Jewish Boy" Shalom gave up.

Of course, the outcome was never in doubt. The match at the Bring The Heat IV event hosted by Crossfire Wrestling on Sunday drew about 200 people to the Merriton Community Centre.

The event marks the beginning of a busy season for LaPlante and other local wrestlers.

"We're looking at doing a show a month," said LaPlante, from Port Colborne, who runs Niagara-based Crossfire. "We have wrestlers from all over Niagara and Ontario. Today we have a guy who is actually from Israel!"

He said Crossfire shows are throwbacks to professional wrestling's heyday.

"We try to put on a show for the whole family. You can see we have a lot of kids in the audience, so we want to do something that is entertaining for everyone and doesn't involve women taking their tops off or that sort of thing," he said.

"Wrestling is entertainment. And if you have good story lines, good characters and good action in the wrestling, people love it. So that is what we are trying to do."

Wrestling characters are usually basic archetypes — heroes and villains whose outlandish behaviour identifies what role they play.

In his own match, LaPlante played the role of hero — the local boy out to make good. He raced into the ring to cheers and rock music.

Shalom was the bad guy, known in wrestling as "the heel." His character, harkening back to old-school wrestling villains like the Iron Sheik or Nikolai Volkoff, plays to ethnic stereotypes. His manager, known as The Rabbi, is draped in an Israeli flag and on the back of Shalom's sweater, above a Star of David, was the phrase "You got Jewed."

The hero was stalwart, even when his opponent had the upper hand. The villain was cowardly, escaping the ring when he wasn't winning.

LaPlante said as Crossfire holds more shows, fans get to know the characters and come back to see the next plot twist.

The Bring The Heat IV event also featured wrestlers from Cambridge, Niagara Falls, Toronto and Rochester, N.Y.

LaPlante said most wrestlers cannot make a living at it, so they practice and perform part-time, although some of them do get try-outs for bigger events including those hosted by the WWE.

Bigger New Year's Eve show could mean bigger problems

JOHN LAW
Postmedia Network

It's a cliché as old as the word 'cliché': Be careful what you wish for.

You want a bigger New Year's Eve show? A huge headliner? More bells and whistles?

There's a cost to that. And not just money. The more our New Year's Eve show grows in Niagara Falls, the more headaches it entails. Until it becomes unrecognizable from the fun, local concert it used to be.

Sound extreme? Compare last year's show to what it was 15 years ago. It was still a big televised concert back then, but uniquely local and accessible. The headliner was usually Canadian, the lineup a mix of new and old, the crowd in the 20,000 range.

That was when CH broadcast the show. Six years ago CH Global took over, sending its ET Canada team down to host. Instead of the weather guy at CH it was Cheryl Hickey. Things were looking up.

Two years ago, Global shifted away from the Canadian/classic rock headliner to a big U.S. name in Demi Lovato. There were complaints, but ratings were up. That's what mattered.

Last year, Keith Urban was the headliner. Ratings went up another 30%. You see where this is going, right?

A bigger show for this year. More sponsors. More money. More hands in the pie. This means more pressure on organizers to secure funding for what was already a $3-million show last year. And that's where things get tricky.

Global has still not confirmed it will be participating in this year's concert. The city and Niagara Parks Commission say talks are ongoing and details are being discussed about who will pay for what, which in itself sets off a few alarms. If everyone was so pleased with last year's event, what's to discuss? Why play hardball now?

I tried prying that out of the major players — the mayor, Niagara Falls Tourist, Niagara Parks Commission and Global — but no one budged. Talks are ongoing, things are being kept close to the vest.

But New Year's Eve is just five months away and there's still no commitment it will even be televised. Something seems amiss.

If Global wants to pay less,

JULIE JOSSA/POSTMEDIA NETWORK

Keith Urban is pictured headlining the New Year's Eve celebration in Victoria Park in Niagara Falls that ushered in 2015.

it'll argue the city benefits from massive exposure. It's providing the production. It's providing the publicity.

If the city and business partners want to pay less, they'll argue Global is benefiting from the advertising. From the built-in audience.

From the perspective of doing a show in Niagara Falls instead of ... I don't know, Chatham.

Both sides benefit. But like any tough contract, you don't want the other party to benefit more.

Both sides want a bigger show. Who pays for it could be the deal-breaker. There's only so much taxpayer money and grants the city can offer. There's only so much the tourism industry will pledge, knowing hotel rooms are booked solid anyway. And there's only so much Global will pledge. Global is owned by Shaw Media. Shaw Media has shareholders. Shareholders tend to ruin everything.

Global's 'nuclear' option is to pull out of televising the show, which is so ridiculous it just might happen.

And we'll once again be left wondering if bigger was better. We all lose if this great event, saved from cancellation a decade ago, becomes a victim of its own success.

That's one hell of a long Syne no one wants.

■ OPENING SEASON

Lineup named for St. Catharines arts centre

KARENA WALTER
Postmedia Network

The inaugural season of St. Catharines' new performing arts centre was announced with international favourites and local talent.

"I'm just so excited," said Steve Solski, executive director of FirstOntario Performing Arts Centre. "All of the hard work, the last four or five years when the project started as a conversation ... It's now becoming a reality as we start to engage the patrons."

The Hot Ticket season of programming includes performers like fiddler Natalie MacMaster, Broadway star Louise Pire, rumba flamenco artist Jesse Cook, singers/songwriters Bruce Cockburn and St. Catharines native Ron Sessmith and comedians Rick Mercer, Tom Green and Stephen Wright, among others.

The centre's four venues at the corner of St. Paul and Carlisle Sts. will also welcome local groups like Gallery Players of Niagara and Niagara Symphony Orchestra.

"That is only a small part of what the centre will offer," Solski said.

The centre will be the heart of culture for Niagara.

Solski said he believes the centre will be a place in which artists can aspire to perform.

It will also host other events and is looking for those interested in renting the space, such as schools that might want to hold graduations there and businesses or social clubs that want to host after-hour functions.

The arts centre gives us the ability to bring the community together, not only around the art. It gives us the ability to bring the community together," Solski said.

Solski said the centre has 400 dates confirmed for events and expects to have up to 300 film screenings when it announces a film program in January.

That's 700 events, more than the 600 projected, he said.

"It's not just going to set the tone, but it's going to allow us to dream about how this centre can kind of live and breathe in our downtown core, in our city and in our region," said Sara Palmieri, programming and marketing manager on the inaugural season.

"I think it's going to inspire a lot of people to dream about different ways they can see themselves in the facility, whether that's through an arts and culture entry point, or a corporate entry point or a commercial entry point."

Palmieri said returning artists were chosen who were favourites at Brock's Centre for the Arts and new, soon-to-be new favourites.

The Brock Centre for the Arts closed April 23 after more than 45 years, with the FirstOntario Performing Arts Centre continuing the legacy of programming.

"We're really excited to bring back to St. Catharines Darlene Love," said Palmieri, who worked at Brock's centre. "We had her a few years ago and she blew the top off the Sean O'Sullivan Theatre."

Love will be the first artist in Partridge Hall, the largest of the centre's four venues with 775 seats.

A few weeks before that Nov. 28 concert, the centre will have open celebrations and festivities, Palmieri said they'll be inviting the community inside for open houses, tours and special events as well as announcing other more programming.

Tickets went on sale Tuesday for Seat Owner Members — those people who made a one-time donation of $500 for a seat in Partridge Hall. That campaign has seen 60% of the seats sold.

On Aug. 6, tickets will be available to former Brock Centre for the Arts members who want to renew their memberships at the new centre. New FirstOntario Performing Arts Centre Members can buy tickets on Aug. 22. Memberships cost $100 and give holders ticket discounts and other benefits.

Tickets for the general public go on sale Sept. 12 at 10 a.m.

Tickets can be ordered online at www.FirstOntarioPAC.ca or purchased in person at the interim box office at Suite 1-101 King St. until Aug. 15 and at the centre's permanent box office from Aug. 17 on. Niagara Falls actor Christian Distefano, 10, on set for the horror series The Strain. The episode airs Aug. 2.

Falls actor Distefano appears on The Strain

JOHN LAW
Postmedia Network

At 10 years old, Christian Distefano might be too young to watch the gruesome TV series The Strain.

Unless he's in it, of course. The busy Niagara Falls actor will appear in the fourth episode of the vampire show's second season — The Silver Angel — airing Aug. 2 on FX. In a flashback scene, Distefano will play Young Rudyard, the eventual owner of a fabled book called the Occhio Lumen, which may hold the secret to defeating a vampire horde led by The Master.

The episode, filmed in January, brings Distefano face-to-face with some of the show's grotesque creatures.

"It was a little scary because I didn't know what the vampires would look like," he says. "But it was a really fun experience."

Based on the Guillermo del Toro & Chuck Hogan trilogy of novels, The Strain has been a ratings hit since it debuted last summer. But with its intense horror and violence, Distefano is hardly a regular viewer.

"I mean, vampires and blood and gore... that's not my type of genre," he says. "It isn't his first brush with horror, however. Three years ago, the Princess Margaret Elementary School student filmed the spooky Rick O'Connell, a demonic clown suit which attaches to a boy's father after a birthday party. It was produced by Cabin Fever and Hostel director Eli Roth.

He has also appeared in the thriller Cut Bank, the made-for-TV movie Finding Christmas, and the children's shows Odd Squad, Creative Galaxy and Paw Patrol.

The Strain will likely bring him his biggest audience yet.

"It's still pretty exciting," he says, "it's really cool to be on a show like The Strain and say, 'Hey, that's me!'"

Distefano's dad, Mike, a Niagara Falls mortgage broker, started watching the show when he heard Christian had been cast.

"I kind of took a liking to it, it's interesting," he says. "I was really impressed with the graphics. The cinematography on the show attracted me more than the storyline."

Filmed in Toronto, Christian auditioned for the integral role of Zack before filming started, but lost out to Ben Hyland. When the role was recast for Season 2, Distefano auditioned again and made it to the final two, before losing to the slightly older Max Charles.

"That's how he got the role of Rudyard," says his dad. "It was offered to him based on previous auditions."

The Strain airs Sunday nights at 10 p.m. on FX.

Lightstone stars in RiverBrink fundraiser

Postmedia Network

Former Anne of Green Gables and Road to Avonlea actress Marilyn Lightstone will star in a fundraising Cole Porter revue Aug. 3 to benefit the RiverBrink Art Museum.

Lightstone will join Toronto cabaret performers Gabi Epstein, Lawrence Cotton and musical director David Warrack for Primarily Porter. The show is a fundraiser for RiverBrink's future space for community education programs.

Lightstone won the Genie Award for best actress for the 1975 movie Lies My Father Told Me, and best supporting actress for 1978's In Praise of Older Women.

On stage she was seen in The Seagull at the Stratford Festival and was among the original New York and Los Angeles casts of the interactive show Tamara.

The show will have a special appearance by local actor Jeremy Carver James, currently in his fourth season with the Shaw Festival.

The revue will also include an extravagant recreation of Marchesa di Casati's Fountain Dress, made by costumer Pam Mundy.

Konzelmann Estate Winery will provide canapés and sparkling wine to start the night, followed by a four-course dinner catered by Niagara Gourmet Caterers and Willow Cafe.

Capping the night will be an appearance on the lake by the Niagara Belle.

Frewin joins magical show Masters of Illusion

JOHN LAW
Postmedia Network

It's no illusion that you're seeing double with Greg Frewin this summer.

In addition to a regular nightly show at his Ellen Ave. theatre, the Niagara Falls magician can also be seen on the CW Network's revival of Masters of Illusion. He was on the first episode of Season 2 July 10, and appears in a total of five season segments.

Frewin filmed the episodes last February. Among the illusions he performs are the 'squishier' illusion and the 'glass sawing origami' illusion. In the season premiere he performed the 'sphere', in which one of his dancers is placed in a container which is pierced with flame lit stakes. When the container opens, two dancers and a wolf emerge.

All have been part of his popular live show in Niagara Falls over the years.

"I take the approach that it's just a live show, and there happens to be six cameras out in the audience at the same time," he says. "That way, when I perform I feel like I'm in the same mindset (as a live show). If you start working that camera too much, the audience knows it." Other magicians performing throughout the 13 episodes are Ed Alonzo, Rick Thomas, Murray SawChuck, Nathan Burton, Tommy Wind and Michael Turco.

"These guys are professional, definitely," says Frewin. "It's not a low-end kind of show."

"A lot of these guys are my friends, and you sort of forget when you work in your own theatre that there's that much good magic out there."

Hosted by Dean Cain, the series is a revival of a Pax TV series filmed at Magic Castle in Hollywood in 2000 and 2001.

An offshoot of the series is the Masters of Illusion touring show, which Frewin hopes to bring to Canada early next year.

To help promote the TV series, Frewin will also appear on The Today Show either Aug. 10 or 13.

If it's Aug. 13, he'll need some magic to survive a gruelling schedule: He'll do his Niagara Falls show, fly out to New York that night, do The Today Show early the next morning, then catch a flight back to Niagara Falls for that night's show.

"It's always exciting to get on a show like that with a big viewership."

Frewin's remaining episodes will be July 24, Aug. 7, 28, 28, Sept. 11 and Sept. 25. The show airs Friday night at 8.

Movies, music and moonlight

JOHN LAW
Postmedia Network

The Niagara Integrated Film Festival is over, but you can still find some outdoor cinema in a local vineyard.

Château des Charmes in Niagara-on-the-Lake will keep the movies coming with its Earth & Sky Film Nights. Two music-themed flicks will be offered July 31 and Sept. 4, to coincide with the winery's summer-long Music Markets.

Ethan and Joel Coen's Inside Llewyn Davis, about a struggling folk singer at a crossroads in 1961 New York, will be shown July 31.

On Sept. 5 will be Ethan Hawke's documentary Seymour: An Introduction, about the career of classical pianist Seymour Bernstein who walked away from a successful career as a performer to teach music.

Doors open at 7:30 p.m. for both screenings.

The series is a partnership with Niagara Falls production company Planet's Communications.

"Wine, music, film and food are natural partners — we've supported local independent musicians and artisans for many years," says Château des Charmes spokeswoman Michele Bosc. "When the opportunity to partner with Mongrel Media came about thanks to Planet's, it felt like a good fit."

"Small Canadian companies producing world class products. What could be better?"

Lawn chairs and blankets are welcome, and food is provided by Niagara food truck The Yellow Pear.

Tickets are $15 plus tax, which includes one glass of wine (you can keep the glass).

The winery's Music Markets series continues Aug. 3 with Levi Randall, followed by Jane's Party Sept. 7. The markets run noon to 6 p.m. both days, with free admission.
